Idioms learn and practice idioms. Idioms can mislead non-native English speakers because they are phrases that do not have the same meaning as the words spoken in reality. However, they are quite common in English, so it is important that you learn about them. In the idioms pages you will learn what idioms are and be able to learn common idioms and practice their phrasal verbs. A way to potentially increase your score by speaking in an IELTS speaking test is to use phrasal verbs (if used correctly!). This will certainly be noticed by the expert. More on collocations. Being able to collocate properly is extremely important when you speak or write in English, and your skills in that area will be what the examiner is looking at. You don't have to learn new words in isolation. Instead, you should check out what other words collocate with the new word you are learning. As Word Lists can lower your score if you type 'IELTS dictionary stock' into Google, you'll find 1000s of websites with long lists of complex words. Most of these websites will allow you to believe that their Word Lists or Band 7 Vocabulary will boost your IELTS score... But these websites don't help you. After years of marking an IELTS essay, I can promise you that learning a few words from a list you found online will never increase your score. The only way to effectively learn new words and use them properly is by studying them out of context, or in other words, from real sources of information. Don't list. You knew? The human mind can only effectively memorize about 15 new words in a foreign language a day - more, and you won't study them properly and make mistakes. What happens if I IELTS word lists? In the past, many of my students have downloaded long word lists or Band 7 Vocabulary with that they might just learn new words by memorizing them. The result was always the same: they would try to use these new words in a sentence and get them completely wrong. It doesn't matter how complicated your vocabulary is - IELTS experts can tell when you use the word incorrectly and will give you a lower mark if you make a lot of mistakes.
